CENTRAL INTELLIGENCE BULLETIN

10 March 1966

*Vietnam: (Information as of 4:30 AM EST)

The Military Situation in South Vietnam: Early yesterday, Communist forces estimated at between one and three battalions attacked the A Shau special forces camp defended by some 450 paramilitary troops in western Thua Thien Province. Heavy contact around the perimeter of the camp continued throughout the day. After a short lull during the evening hours, another full-scale assault was launched early this morning, and the camp was partially overrun today. The US Special Forces detachment has suffered casualties of four killed and 10 wounded. Four aircraft have also been lost in the engagement.

[Two enemy soldiers who surrendered to government authorities in Thua Thien Province on 5 March claimed to be members of a North Vietnamese regiment that infiltrated the province last month. They also said that the regiment had its command post situated only about six miles northeast of A Shau and had been planning to attack the camp.]

[Elsewhere, some six battalions of the US 1st Cavalry Division plan to initiate Operation JIM BOWIE in northern Binh Dinh Province. This search-and-destroy effort, scheduled to last ten days, was preceded by Operation MASHER/WHITE WING, which resulted in over 1,800 enemy dead in a six-week period ending last Monday.]

Political Developments in South Vietnam: General Thi was relieved today by the ruling military Directorate as commander of I Corps.

[no threat to security has occurred or will arise.]

[Prior to the meeting of the Directorate, Saigon area commander General Khang had said he and other Directorate members--with only one possible exception--were planning to concur when Premier Ky charged General Thi with the obstruction of the Saigon government's authority in I Corps. Thi afterwards was to be offered an ambassadorial post in Thailand or a training assignment in the United States.]

General Thi, as well as two of the other three military corps commanders, has exercised a good deal of independence in his area of responsibility, although there is no conclusive evidence that he has been deliberately obstructing government programs. In addition to having an inhibiting effect upon the other corps commanders, Thi's removal will also signify the loss of power by one of Premier Ky's strongest potential rivals.

25X1

Belgium: Efforts to resolve Belgium's month-old cabinet crisis now center around the slim possibility of a Catholic-Liberal coalition. The Catholics are generally more in harmony with the business-oriented Liberals than with their former Socialist coalition partners on economic issues, but have disagreed on attitudes toward linguistic rivalries. Omission of the Socialists from a new coalition would mean the departure of Socialist Foreign Minister Spaak, long the source of Belgian foreign policy initiatives.

Bulgaria: Bulgarian party chief and Premier Todor Zhivkov will soon give up his premiership,

25X1

from his Premiership
[redacted]
Zhivkov, who may step aside as early as 11 March when the National Assembly is scheduled to meet,
pk stated several months ago that the dual duties as leader of both the government and the party were too demanding. He may also want to bring his regime more in line with the practice of separating the ranking government and party posts now followed in other East European countries. This re-shuffling is not expected to affect Zhivkov's authority as the top leader in the country. Deputy Premiers Zhivko Zhivkov and Stanko Todorov are the most likely candidates to assume the premiership. [redacted]
